Death of Dr Blyth
Last night we received intelligence of the death of Dr Robert Blyth, of Sorell. Though he was much better known to a generation of Tasmanians that has preceded him to the grave Dr Blyth must be well known, at least by repute, to many people in the colony outside of the Sorell district, where he was as familiar to the little child as to the oldest resident. He was one of the oldest medical practitioners in the colony, and has been a resident practitioner in the Sorell district for over 40 years. He was L.S.A., Lond., 1834, and M.R.C.S., Eng., 1835, and arrived in Tasmania while still a young man. Shortly after his arrival he selected Sorell as the scene of his labours, and there he has laboured ever since, in other ways besides looking after the bodily condition of the people of Sorell. During his early days in the colony he was noted for his great activity and powers of endurance in the saddle. He had to travel over many miles of country in the course of his professional practice, and never refused to mount for a journey to a sufferer by accident or a case of dangerous sickness at any hour of the night. Being an affable and sympathetic man with a large and varied experience, his advice was never restricted to a course of pathological treatment, and many a man in the bush and the township received a piece of good advice with reference to his worldly affairs and other matters from "The Doctor." He always took a keen interest in politics, and was very fond of discussing the questions of the day when in company, where his was always a welcome face, as he had a kind and genial disposition which won the general esteem. Some years ago he left the Sorell district for a short time and resided in Hobart, but he was never quite at home out of the old district, where he was warmly welcomed upon his return. He had passed the period of life given to man by the psalmist, and for the several years past his sight has been failing, at last necessitating the aid of someone to lead him about. Dr Blyth was twice married, and his second wife survives him. He also leaves a grown up family, and it is only a few weeks ago that one of his daughters was married to Mr G. Marshall, of Sunnyside. He had held the appointment of Justice of the Peace from 1847.
