The Popular Science Review Volume 5 (1866) p250 Microscopy

A Pocket Compound Microscope, of very ingenious construction, has been devised by Mr William Moginie, of Messrs Baker's establishment. When packed in its case the instrument appears as a small oblong box, which may be easily placed in a great-coat pocket. When required for use the 'body', containing an attached stage, is taken out and fastened on the cover, into the lower part of which a small mirror is inserted. A leg, moving upon a hinge, is then pulled out from the bottom of the case, is fixed by means of a catch, like a house-ladder, and the apparatus is ready for use. We have used Mr Moginie's microscope, and can speak well of it. It is a handy instrument, and will be found useful by hospital physicians and field botanists.... [an illustration of the 'New Pocket Microscope' is included in the article.]

Erratum – In the List of Fellows duly elected on the 12th of December 1866 the name of William Maguire, Esq., was given in this Journal instead of William Moginie, Esq., 35, Queen Square, W.C.

Hardwicke's Science-Gossip 1 Apr 1868 p91 Microscopy – Pocket Cabinet

Mr W. Moginie, of 244, High Holborn, has designed a compact little pocket cabinet, which is made of pine or oak, and contains three or four divided trays opening on pivots like a French rule, so that any object in any tray may be found at once. Each tray holds six objects, and the whole is very compact for the coat pocket, at a moderate price.
