The Times 2 Jun 1902 Death

The death has occurred at Bewdley of Mr Joseph Tangye, an engineer of note, who since his retirement from the firm of Messrs Tangye, at Birmingham, had made his home at Bewdley. When Brunel was unable to get the Great Eastern afloat he sent a representative to Birmingham to interview the Tangyes. Mr Joseph Tangye undertook to do what others had failed to do. The hydraulic power which the Tangyes provided accomplished the task and the firm established a great reputation, and from modest beginnings rose to fame and fortune.

Joseph Tangye (1826-1902), son of Joseph Tangye, of Camborne, Cornwall. Developed great mechanical ability, and went to Birmingham in 1855, where he started, in conjunction with his brothers, the well-known Cornwall Works, which developed many patented inventions, especially gas-engines. They also set up Cleopatra's needle on the Thames Embankment. In 1873 he purchased the old Ticknell Palace at Bewdley from the Crown. His study was fitted up with a lathe worked by electricity, and here he spent several hours daily in working out new mechanical inventions. He was a member of the Society of Friends, and was encouraged in his early efforts by Joseph and Charles Sturge (q.v.).
